INTRODUCTION

The Question We Dare Not Ask

On the evening of September 30, 2026, in a prison in Nashville, Tennessee, journalists seated behind a pane of glass hear a sound they should never have heard. The curtain of the execution chamber has just closed. A fifty-year-old woman, Christa Pike, has received a dose of pentobarbital meant to kill her. And through the speakers connected to the chamber's microphones, she can still be heard breathing. She snores. A second dose follows. She is still breathing.

This book is not about the death penalty. It is about a much older, much more intimate question, one that almost everyone has asked at least once, usually at night: how can we know, with certainty, that a person is truly dead?
